Hi Ligia,

I'm glad you connected with Tony and that the Dashboard turned out to be as impressive as I promised 😊.

On a related note, we just finished our reorganization in EPA's Office of Research and Development, and I am in a different position now. I will direct you back to Kris Thayer (copied here) to follow up with her team and get back to you. I do know that the font size has been changed – more prominent and visible, for sure. And the link to the Dashboard is available on the IRIS home page. But I will let Kris come back with fuller information about the status of other planned changes. She is in the middle of intensive travel and reorg mayhem, so it might take a little time for her to get back to you.

Take good care,

Tina

Subject: NAMC - IRIS Assessment Website Changes

Tina:

I hope this e-mail finds you well. I am following up with you regarding our discussions about the North American Metals Council's (NAMC) proposal on changes to the Integrated Risk Information System (IRIS) chemical assessments' web pages.

As we recall, you were going to determine if it would be possible to make the size of the assessment date's font larger on the IRIS web page, so it becomes more obvious to the public. You were also going to see if a link to EPA's Chemistry Dashboard could be added to the IRIS assessments' web pages. We had a webinar with Antony Williams on the Dashboard and agree that it is a powerful tool that parties interested in IRIS assessments should be aware of and utilize.

Any idea as to when some of these changes might be implemented? An update from you would be helpful.

Many thanks,
